The industrial action, which has affected all 44 outlets, includes a seven-hour walk-out planned for 18:00 GMT on Wednesday. The action follows a national walkout on Monday, during which Pizza Express workers voted to accept a new, four-year pay deal which was rejected by their union. The company said strike action would not affect deliveries, and a fresh ballot would be held on Wednesday. The dispute centres on a four-year pay deal rejected by the union Unite, which represents about 7,000 employees. Union leaders have accused the company of "massive intimidation" over the deal. Pizza Express said the first walkout - which involved all but one of the company's restaurants - had been "agreed to unconditionally". "To allow for the maximum support for our customers, we have created a set of contingency plans to ensure no services are affected by the ongoing dispute," the company said. image copyright PA image caption Some workers are taking part in a seven-hour walkout It also said that any employees taking part in the strike would be
