ORACLE DATABASE CLIENT RELEASE 4.2.0.4 11.2.0.4 Mac OS X Client Patch fix Search Events All Colorado-based Rocky Mountain Taco Truck is now serving tacos in Chicago's Lincoln Park neighborhood at April's Taste of Chicago. From all accounts, the tacos are delicious. "After four trips to Chicago to sample the taco scene, we are confident that the food is fantastic and the people really enjoy it," says Danny Cudgign, the executive chef for Rocky Mountain Taco Truck. "We also offer many more things than just tacos: quesadillas, guacamole, churros, onion strings, hot sauces and salsas. The consistency from taco stand to taco truck is the same, so we think it will appeal to the crowds who are looking for a consistent, great value and delectable food in the city." What is a taco truck? According to Danny, "It's a food truck that specializes in tacos. From the people we have spoken to, they all seem to think the food is really good. People enjoy the variety and quality of the food and the staff is very friendly. A mobile eatery is more expensive, but the food is worth the cost." Danny has managed and worked in restaurants in Chicago, and he learned to value local, fresh food when working at Seven Fish in the Logan Square neighborhood. "When we came across this space, we saw the potential," he adds. "The food is portable, easy to make and the staff was very passionate about the food. We want to provide our customers with a great food experience. The challenge here is providing the customer with as much variety as possible." Danny worked with Taste of Chicago's head chef, Todd Kennedy to design a menu that was designed to make the most of their limited space. They started with the tacos, but also wanted to serve spicy and sweet toppings and snacks to enhance the taco experience. The menu also includes a variety of soft and hard tacos, quesadillas, tamales, desserts and sides. "This is the type of food that guests can bring for lunch or dinner," says Danny.
