1-year mcafee trial 2015 full version, The effect of eight days of cocooning on serum and intraocular cytokines and chemokines in rabbits. In a previous study, eight days of cocooning increased intraocular levels of tumor necrosis factor (TNF)- α and interleukin (IL)-6 in rabbits. The purpose of the current study was to examine the effects of cocooning on serum and intraocular cytokines and chemokines. The rabbits were assigned to three groups. In each group, the aqueous humor was aspirated, and blood was sampled from the ear vein preoperatively, immediately after cessation of cocooning, and 1, 3, and 8 days after cocooning. Serum levels of TNF- α , IL-6, and IL-8 were measured with enzyme-linked immunosorbent assays, and intraocular levels of TNF- α and IL-6 were measured with an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay. The most significant increase in the concentrations of cytokines and chemokines occurred in the intraocular fluid after 1 day of cocooning and in the blood after 3 days of cocooning, and these concentrations decreased with time. Serum levels increased after 3 days of cocooning for all cytokines and chemokines. Eight days of cocooning resulted in significantly increased serum levels of TNF- α , IL-6, and IL-8 and in increased intraocular levels of TNF- α , IL-6, IL-8, and monocyte chemoattractant protein-1. However, after 8 days of cocooning, the serum levels of these cytokines and chemokines decreased and the intraocular levels decreased. Cocooning induced an increase in the levels of the serum and intraocular cytokines and chemokines, but the cytokine and chemokine levels returned to the normal levels after 8 days of cocooning. To the best of our knowledge, this is the first study to demonstrate that cocooning influences the levels of intraocular cytokines and chemokines in vivo.
