You can use Photoshop, Adobe Photoshop Elements, and Lightroom to edit and create images that are saved in a JPEG, GIF, PNG, PSD or TIFF format. Most of the free image editors mentioned in this article are incompatible with Photoshop and Photoshop Elements. They are optimized for simpler editing of low resolution images. You can use Adobe Photoshop for professional editing of images (such as for posters, photo books and web graphics), or you can use Photoshop Elements for simple editing and image retouching. To use Photoshop or Photoshop Elements, you will need access to an expensive desktop computer or a laptop with a web connection. You will need to buy a subscription for each computer or mobile device you use. The good news is that you can only download and install one version of Photoshop or Photoshop Elements at a time. Common Photoshop versions can be identified by the purple color they use. Try to avoid downloading a trial version. Photoshop now includes paid-for versions and updates for free. For some products such as Photoshop Elements, you can download the trial version to your computer. Then you can buy a full-time subscription for Photoshop Elements, or buy Photoshop for the same price. Adobe Photoshop Adobe Photoshop allows you to create, edit and create high-quality images that are saved in the most commonly used graphic formats, such as GIF, JPEG, and PNG. New England Missionary Training School The New England Missionary Training School (NEMS) is a Christian non-denominational coeducational college in New London, Connecticut. It was founded in 1823 in Wethersfield, Connecticut, and moved to New London in 1834. The school was founded by the New London Congregational Church, and operated by the Congregational Church for several years. When a denominational school opened in New London in 1867, NEMS offered night classes to the public. The current building was dedicated in 1911, but retains its original design, including massive, low-pitched hip roof and a round tower with a bell and peephole. Wethersfield is still known for its historic schoolhouse, and NEMS is still the city's only denominational college. The school was founded as the Female Seminary of the New London Church, and the building was designed by Henry Camp. A seminary was originally a school for girls in a religious order. The college was run by a Board of Trustees. The Board of Trustees is still in existence. Around 1900, students attended classes weekdays, and had to pay tuition to attend NEMS full-time. By this time, tuition had been reduced to make the school a fraction of the cost of public colleges; among the efforts to reduce costs was the elimination of the seminary department. In 1955, the New London Historical Society acquired the property. NEMS operates there today. NEMS has a unique relationship with the Congregational Church. While officially non-denominational, NEMS students are required to be members of the Congregational Church and the Covenant Divinity School is the denomination's seminary; however, students are not required to attend worship or classes at that church on a regular basis.
