Using Dreamweaver for laying out pages
Dreamweaver allows you to create and modify many of the HTML tags that you can use to create a website. Figure 5-3 shows a typical page view in Dreamweaver's editor. If you select from the Page menu, you see the different types of elements you can add to a page. The HTML portion of a typical web page includes the following common HTML tags: * * * * *
* * * Figure 5-3: Dreamweaver's page view shows the tags that you can use to construct web pages. You can also add to this structure with web page components such as your favorite images, styles, scripts, and more. When a web page is viewed, the browser renders the tags and combines them with the web page content, so adding tags is useful when creating web pages.

After you select the page type you want to create, you can start adding elements to your page. Figure 5-4 shows how a page title appears when you add one. After you add text or other elements, you can format them as you want. Dreamweaver gives you a preview of how the page will appear when it's viewed in a web browser. opinion Why we need 'generational equity' now more than ever When your child asks you where they come from, what will you say? As we head into 2018, equity issues are front and center in the new California. They're part of the reasons thousands of young people have been getting arrested for protesting in the streets, and why California's AB 60 — which sparked the state's housing crisis — finally passed the Assembly. This is the story of how California's student protesters, and the young Californians in general, helped create a demand for a more just state. The California Dream is alive and well — but is it possible that the dream was created out of the ashes of systemic injustice? For example, California's $53 billion Proposition 13, which gave the financial elite a permanent tax break in exchange for $13 billion per year in public services, eventually wiped out $17 billion annually in local property taxes. In other words, the California Dream is now a reaction to a past condition of systemic injustice. The California Dream was originally formed out of the ashes of systemic injustice. Since 1982, Proposition 13 has remained an integral part of California's tax system and its politics. Many Californians have come to believe Proposition 13 has been enacted in order to protect property rights. But while property is guaranteed by the California Constitution, it's not a right from which everyone benefits. Until recently, the vast majority of homeowners have been the only ones to benefit from Proposition 13. We need to change this. A new sentiment The youthful spirit that drove the 2016 presidential election was not as prevalent as it was in 2016. We had a young president in Barack Obama and millennials, the fastest-growing generation in America, were running the universities. Obama's victory in 2008 seemed almost permanent. He was the first president since the 1960s to win a second term. However, the next election revealed a new feeling among voters. Obama was like a president from the past, and the new voters who represented the future. As California voters — especially those under the age of 45 — voted overwhelmingly for Hillary Clinton, one of the main issues was about enthusiasm. Clinton's supporters were overwhelmingly young, dynamic and optimistic. The 2016 presidential election felt like something new — generational change. Clinton's supporters were the youngest generation that had been in power for a while. The current generation of college students, the young people just entering the job market and those

An interactive 'black-box' approach to improving the viability of genetic evolution - imartin2k ===== imartin2k Also this article was discussed earlier on in HN: [Q: Help with SQL, JOIN, and grouping? I have these tables.

I'm trying to do a query where I'm displaying the number of students from each course, by department, on the first day of each term, and with the highest number of students per course. I know you're supposed to join tables, but I've never done it before and am really not sure how to do it right now. I've tried making a single query as the JOIN and GROUP BY, and have also tried several other combinations of attempts to join them. Do you guys have any ideas?

Course_table: Course_id, Department, Term, Course_name
Student_table Student_id, Department, Term, Student_name
Department_table Department_id, Department
Term_table Term_id, Term
Day_table Day_id, Day_number, Day_text

Query Attempts:
SELECT s.Department, s.Course_name, s.Student_name, count(s.Student_id) FROM Day as d INNER JOIN Student_table as s ON s.Department = d.Department_id WHERE s.Term = 1 AND d.Day_number = 1

The output should give me something like this: Department

Course Name Number Department 1 Math
Smith 3 Department 2 Math Jones 1
Department 3 Science Smith 5 A: SELECT department.department, course.course_name, student.student_name, count(student.student_id)
