Q: What accounts for the low lifetime of the season one secondary DC universe? After listening to many comics reviews and a lot of debates I can't figure out why the newish DC'universe (the one that has a new branding) seems to be created for one season only. Basically, you have: 1) the Batman Elseworlds/Justice League/Suicide Squad; 2) a Justice League v Justice League aka Watchmen, which has its own branding and is... and truth be told, I don't know what to call it. And then there are 3) The New 52, DC Rebirth, and 5) More New 52, which are supposed to be getting a second season. However, apart from the Watchmen, none of them seem to be really used and seem to be there only to have a branding exercise. The same could be said of 6) The Multiversity, 7) Zoom, 8) The Hunt, and all the other "seasonal" names, like Justice League vs Suicide Squad, Batman: Touch, Batman: Mirror Master, etc. Now, in summary, out of all the current crop of DC'universe, which one is the most viable long-term source for a really long running television series, and why? A: The new DCU is designed to get a season that ends, and then get the same characters and universe for another season after it that can have a much greater diversity and reach than the first season. So it's more like a last season for the original the new DCU. This is the same reason why we don't get the new My Hero Academia/All Might since it's only supposed to be a one season series. This is why there are series for the Arrowverse and JLA/Avengers universe even though it's only supposed to be a one season series. A: There are 5 universes with a clear-cut "one season only" timing: The New 52. The New 52 Earth-2. The New 52 Earth-16. The New 52 Elseworlds. The New 52: Season Two. There are only one or two notable exceptions to those rules, and they aren't the things that set this new DCU apart from the DC Universe that was created decades ago. If you wanted to get at the heart of the matter, the DC Universe that was set up
