genetic control of the resistance of the body to selenium deficiency]. Mice that had been living for a long time in a selenium-deficient environment for many generations and up to 20 generations before with a selenium-deficient diet undergo a pronounced stress reaction caused by such a diet. An RNA pool of selenium-deficient mice of the C3H, CF1 and C57BL strains was investigated at the age of 4 and 10-15 months. Thirty micrograms of RNA were isolated from individual mice and analysed with the help of the RNA-probe cDNA-combine from mouse embryonal tissues. It has been shown that the changes in selenium metabolism are accompanied with a considerable rise in the level of RNA with a molecular weight of 10-15 000 D. The RNA level increased in spite of selenium deficiency. The RNA from the selenium-deficient mice of the C3H, CF1 and C57BL strains hybridized with RNA probes specific to the mouse embryonic tissues; their hybridization signals, however, were always weaker than in the control mice. The results suggest that the selenium-deficient mice, as well as other animals and man, show a genetic resistance to the deficiency of this element.

The resistance is accompanied with a greater accumulation of the RNA with a molecular weight of 10-15 000 D in the selenium-deficient mice.

External Source It gets real THE QUESTION: What is the most expensive item you buy? What's yours? Recycling and a thrifty lifestyle have become mainstays for many in this day and age. But for others, plastic is the money maker, the dominant material of consumer spending. This includes plastics that make up the so-called household good, such as lightweight plastic bottles, furniture, and food packaging. Americans bought $281 billion worth of goods made from plastic and other materials last year, according to estimates from the Environmental Protection Agency and GreenSpec Inc., a Boulder-based environmental consultancy, as reported by CoinTelegraph. The U.S. is the only developed country to spend the most per capita on native app default appear on home screen on iOS The default action for any application on iOS is to display in the Dock. Is there any way to make react-native apps display in the home screen by default, just like native iOS apps? I've tried creating a Launch Screen with the following contents: but the image never renders.

A: React Native apps always render in the foreground even in the launch screen. So you could just run react-native start in your project root as it will start your app in the foreground for you.

Then, the app should be displayed in the home screen once you've finished taking it to the background by pressing the home button. In the prior art, a solid-state imaging device is used widely as an image sensor that detects light and generates image signals. For example, in the prior art, a CMOS sensor is used (see, for example, Japanese Unexamined Patent Application Publication No. 2009-206192). Such a CMOS sensor has, on a silicon substrate, a photoelectric converter composed of a photodiode or the like, a CMOS circuit composed of a plurality of transistors (referred to below as “p-channel MOS transistors” and “n-channel MOS transistors”) each of which controls the readout operation of a signal from the photoelectric converter, and the like. FIG. 1 illustrates an example of a CMOS sensor 100 of the prior
