Byrne Dizney/IPS “We can still see the smoke rising from their slag heap,” said Shubhada Samadh, 70, as she tended her vegetable plot in the village of Rueda, in Samadiya district of Kashmir’s Shopian district. “We used to clean their piles of fire-blighted timber with water and ashes, but we are no longer able to do so,” she said. Shopian and Samadiya districts in the Kashmir Valley are reeling under acute power cuts. Electricity distribution company Circle of Power has asked its workers to cut power in these districts on Fridays, so that they can attend to the needs of emergencies in Greater Kashmir. Shopian district has been hit the hardest with electricity outages more often than other parts of Kashmir. Rueda is part of Shopian district, and accounts for more than one third of the total losses on the Shopian-Samadhiya line. In the last four years, Circle of Power has asked its workers to bring power outages to an end on Fridays. “The power lines are broken and there is no diesel supply,” said Rasheed, a water tanker driver, adding, “We don’t know when electricity would get restored.” “I want my children to have food, medicine and a good education,” said Samadh. “I don’t want to see them die of poverty and disease.” Even in otherwise-peaceful areas of the Valley, people are reeling under power shortages. “We are having a difficult time managing,” said Mohammad Yaseen, a resident of the Bassi area of Badgam district, as he struggled to manage his three and a half hour outage, which began on March 21, the beginning of the apple season in Kashmir, when farmers begin reaping their harvests. “For more than six days, we have been receiving electricity from the reserve supply. Even then, the main supply is also used up,” he said. In Balakot district, a father of four said his children have developed breathing problems because of the power cuts, and have been making frequent visits to government hospitals. “My children have started to cough and face respiratory problems,” said Mohammad Mir, 40, as he and his
