Idea: select company, employee_count from (select top 1 company, count() as employee_count from emp group by company order by emp.company) order by employee_count desc A: Would: select top 1 company, count() as employee_count from emp group by company order by emp.company do that for you. c-2zw-xw-e-l-d) The table also contains a field called notes which has the proper data but it was empty. I did some research and found that my company were using the ViewerPro. This viewer is a custom viewer created by our IT team and I believe he used the gem to develop this viewer. I'm very stuck, I would really appreciate if you could help me. Thanks, A: The view is defined in file called EmployeeProfileView.rb (version 0.6.1). Look at the code: if params[:employee_id] @profile = EmployeeProfile.by_id(params[:employee_id]) else @profile = EmployeeProfile.all end In this case, params[:employee_id] is not defined but EmployeeProfileView expects to get something in that case. So, you need to pass id. Probably you can do it by adding this to your controllers: def profile @profile = EmployeeProfile.by_id params[:employee_id] || EmployeeProfile.all end A: I've been stuck on a similar problem recently, so I spent a bit of time digging through the Github repo and README. I have a suggestion for you: When changing a gem, don't forget to clear the Gemfile and run bundle clean. Otherwise you might run into
