While snowing I had this thought: The best book last words were are the last words of a lifetime, not the end of a life but the culmination of the life that has been lived. I liked this idea, I could understand it, make it a bit more personal. Time to dig the manuscript out and see if I can find words that continue the idea. Synopsis: The Bones Of The Dead by Dagmar Dontje In a remote border town, Anton Marx receives a delivery of bones from a séance. Inspired by this supernatural gift, Anton takes up the case of a local blacksmith, searching for answers. The close-knit community turns against Anton - but perhaps the haunting bones hold the key to his own family's legacy. But an inevitable change lies ahead for Anton, a change that will impact every member of his family. The road to this change will be one of deceit, betrayal and loss, and the road back will be long and treacherous. What You Can Expect: A gloomy winter snowy British setting A family tragedy A skeletal past and an uncertain future. An online exclusive bonus short story Plot:
