Q: Is there a way to check if a file is located within a jar? I am trying to make a java program that searches a jar for a file that is named "bri.txt". If this file is located within the jar it creates a copy of it and creates an email to the person who owns the file. If the file is not located within the jar it does nothing. I have this part working but the place where I want it to check if the file is located within the jar is the place where it fails. `InputStream in = getClass().getClassLoader().getResourceAsStream("./files/bri.txt"); File newfile = new File("./files/bri.txt"); String filePath = newfile.getAbsolutePath(); String copyPath =filePath+".txt"; File bFile = new File(copyPath); boolean success = bFile.renameTo(new File(copyPath)); if(success) { System.out.println("success"); }` As you can see above I'm using `getClass().getClassLoader().getResourceAsStream()` to get the resources. How can I check to see if the file is within the jar? I've tried using `getClass().getClassLoader().getResource()` to see if I can get the zip file for the jar but it isn't working. Any suggestions? Thanks A: EDIT: Resource is an abstraction for OS resources (such as File, InputStream etc). On a typical UN
