She was the second National Secretary of the Young People's Socialist League (YPSL) following Marc Blitzstein. Biography Arlene was born on July 10, 1913, in Denver, Colorado to Gertrude William Kautz and William Friedrich, a German immigrant who ran a restaurant and later a food processing business. Arlene had a brother named William, who also became a music critic. She received a BA from San Francisco State College in 1936 and a master's degree in social work from Columbia University in 1941. She joined the Communist Party of the USA in 1943, became a member of the Young Communist League of America, and then the Young Communist League in 1944. From 1944, she was the Party's National Secretary (the job that later became known as National Secretary). Friedrich had a contentious relationship with the CPUSA leadership during the height of the Cold War. She took part in the protest against Senator Joseph McCarthy's blacklist in the early 1950s; Arlene was a prominent member of the Group in the 1970s. She was also an outspoken proponent of the Abbie Hoffman conspiracy theories that connected the CPP to the conspiracy against Dr. Martin Luther King. Friedrich also had a strong relationship with New York's socialist youth organizing groups. During the 1960s, she was a national organizer for the

Youth and Students for a Democratic Society (YSD), as well as a local organizer in Buffalo, New York. As the CPUSA's National Secretary from 1944 to 1948, she became the first official American spokesperson for the International Alliance of Theat 3a67dffec
