Bidirectional synaptic integration in migrating cells. Interneurons are some of the most elaborate cells of the nervous system. They extend processes that move through large distances, arborizing and synapsing in their paths. They travel for hours before synapsing and recharging their batteries, yet they must be able to respond immediately to local stimuli if their actions are to be coordinated. How are the cells able to coordinate their actions and identify their long distance targets while moving? We address this question using a model system, the giant fiber system of the earthworm, as it moves through the lateral cord in a single direction. We show that the giant fiber system provides a long distance form of integration, and in so doing, we find that local stimuli can be changed by long distance stimuli. Q: Add sections in Xcode for multiple pages I have added and integrated MPMoviePlayerController in my application in ios 5. What i need is multiple pages. So i need to convert the same interface once again in multiple pages. I need to add the datasource and delegate method for every page and for that i need to add two more files for that one for the Default.png image and one for the.png image. I can't add two additional files for each view controller
