In the 20th and 21st centuries, the surname has been borne by two unrelated families in Ireland. The first family consisted of a single family, the O'Mahony of County Tyrone, with origins in the area of Roslea, near Lough Erne. The surname originated as an anglicised version of the Irish name Muintir O'Doherty; one of the septs associated with O'Dohertys, the sept of Muintir O'Dúghaile, was noted for its wealth; the sept later helped to establish the barony of Dungannon. The second family

Dymocks Graphic Novels The Man of Steel

Dymocks the leading Australian independent bookseller has revealed the winner of the first in its brand new series of Graphic Novels for The Man of Steel and has launched a national competition with a top-tier prize of $7,500. The Man of Steel is written by Allan Heinberg and illustrated by John Romita Jr. The series tells the story of the iconic Superman through the eyes of the people who have worked with and fought beside him, spanning four decades of his career. This is the first of four graphic novels and is the first in the series to be released with a national competition. Since its launch last August, more than 500 people have entered the competition, from six countries across three Continents. A total of nine finalists will be selected, drawn from a panel of judges (an Australian comics creator, editor and writer; a New York-based art director, editor and writer; a U.S.-based super hero illustrator and painter; a British graphic novelist) from across the country. Like Superman, the competition is all about achieving greatness - so the winner, selected by the judges, will be supported by the Dymocks team to produce a stunning, full-colour graphic novel based on the image and likeness of their alter-ego. The winning graphic novel could be released nationally to all Dymocks customers. "We wanted to create a series that really captures the essence of superheroics," says Dymocks business manager Dr. Jason Smith. "If you have ever seen a movie, you are familiar with the hero's origin,
