ZeroMindenTue, 31 Mar 2015 01:46:21 +0000S.A.F.E. Performance Training Fix for Better Mindset, Knowledge &Health

First week of training for me after a vacation! I've been attempting to go hard as much as possible but with only 3 days in the last week I've had to be smart and mimic what I did for 26 days in a row. For most, that wouldn't be an issue but in this case the simple method still triggers us to MOVE which is the most important aspect of improving our mindsets, knowledge, and overall health.

I recently left my device about 50 yards from my car and on my way to get it I had a thought. "How did I get up here?" Wow, first time I'd asked myself this question since I don't store my phone in my car. I do have my data accessible all day but if the body doesn't participate with being in movement, you might as well not have it around. I have a habit of watching the ball bounce off the corner and staying in on purpose to make a play out of the outfield but my fear of the CORNER is the only reason for this habit. There's inherent risk in this but if you mentally know it to be true and act a certain way then this is what it will be regardless of what happens to anyone or anything else. On our second day I had my phone on my car because I had forgotten my Lightning cable and meant to hang it back up in the car but the 3 nights of no practice in a row was not helping any of us in anyway but of course I was the only one running the line. That 4th night I decided to carry it instead of leave it on my car which affected the fastest I was able to run to first base and thus my knowledge of the game as a whole. I was in the same exact area and my gut was telling me to keep
