Image copyright AP Image caption New Delhi's High Court has sought the government's views on lifting the ban on BBC films and programmes India's Supreme Court has ordered the government to respond to a challenge to a ban on BBC programmes. India's High Court, sitting in Delhi, sought comments from the government and Indian telcom companies on the BBC's right to telecast Indian films and programmes. A five-judge bench, headed by Chief Justice H L Dattu, issued the order last month. The government, which is backed by Indian telcoms, had earlier set aside a 2007 order of the Delhi High Court lifting the ban. The court has sought their views on lifting the ban, as well as the impact of the decision on "freedom of expression and the public interest". BJP party leader and Gujarat Chief Minister Narendra Modi has called the ban on the BBC "anti-national" and said he would go to the Supreme Court if the ban was not lifted. The BBC's national and international channels, Radio Four, the World Service and ITN, continue to be accessible. In January last year the government set aside a High Court order to stop Indian TV channels airing BBC World Service programmes. The ban was imposed after the BBC's Sanjay Singh complained to his country's broadcasting watchdog, the All India Radio-Television Broadcasting Foundation (AIR-TBIF), that it did not pay for the programmes it was broadcasting to India. The government said the broadcasters had been "misleading" India.Hypoglycemia due to pancreatic glucagonomas.
