Therefore, the following information will not be included in the data we collect: Real-life player details Player information required to add in-game players Player names or how teams are named What is FIFA Game Data? FIFA Game Data does not contain any data regarding the actual human player who is playing and will not be used for any purpose outside of football video games. How will the data be used? The data collected as part of the FIFA World Cup Brazil Game Data Collector will be used to improve FIFA World Cup Brazil gameplay features, create new ones and enhance players' in-game experience. Data Collection We are using a proprietary method to detect the position of all players on the pitch, their speed, acceleration, rotation, swing and velocity every time they are about to take a touch or pass. We are also tracking all actions, such as tackles, aerial duels and on-ball activity. The data is collected at a range of resolutions from a range of cameras: 90, 120, 240 and 480 (for close-up/low/high and full-body views) and from one or more fixed/moving cameras. Some parts of the data are collected at very high resolution, while in other cases we are collecting data at 10x the size of the pixels in FIFA World Cup Brazil (for example, 120 cameras will deliver data at 120 pixels per inch). The higher the resolution, the more data collected, but also the larger the file sizes. We are careful to keep these sizes in check. We want players to be able to play and enjoy themselves without worrying about the data collection. What happens to the data? The data collected as part of the FIFA World Cup Brazil Game Data Collector will be anonym
