Stagnaro, Francesca. Baseball in Brazil. About The Games. Retrieved January 14, 2014..Construction of the original Buffalo and Rochester bridges in 1873 and 1874 was opposed by the Erie Canal-Chautauqua Marine Canal Commission, then in control of the Erie Canal. The two bridges, part of the route of the canal, were built despite the objections, and construction of the canal began in 1875. Although the commission was finally able to acquire a plot of land for a pier at the location in 1877, the commission did not begin to fund construction until 1881. The pier was not completed until 1888. The original design had a cement base and shell on the top. Work on the piers and the deck was begun in 1889. A board was placed over the top, and later a steel frame was erected. The next year the shell was removed and the top was covered with shingles. At the same time the brick houses were constructed. The town of Chautauqua in 1891 acquired the piers. The original Board of Alderman also owned them. In 1902 the board sold the piers and the deck to the New York Central Railroad for railroad use. The railroad remodeled the piers and the deck, and in 1906 converted the bridge into an engine house. The land on which the piers and deck are located is now a park known as the Inland Waterway Pier Park. The bridge is located directly across the canal from the Buhl House on the west side of the canal. The bridge is now known as the Cleveland Bridge, because the Erie Canal was renamed the New York State Barge Canal. In 1935 the city of Buffalo renamed the bridge. The piers and the bridge deck are included in the National Register of Historic Places listings in Chautauqua County, New York, as well as the Inland Waterway Historic District. The blast comes about five days after a series of suicide bombings rocked Baghdad and Samarra, the capital. Attackers have targeted civilian shopping centers in well-to-do neighborhoods. "This is a horrific attack on innocent Iraqis. These acts of terrorism cannot be tolerated. The people of Iraq have bravely withstood the relentless violence of terrorists over the past year, but now they deserve a better life. "The United States continues to lead a global coalition to seek justice and peace. We have stood with Iraq against terrorists and have implemented a new strategic partnership with Iraq. "Through the strategic alliance we have agreed to deepen our cooperation in every security area from counterterrorism to border security, law enforcement and counternarcotics." The effort is seen as a significant improvement on the breakdown of the U.S. relationship with Iraq since last May when U.S. forces pulled out under pressure from a rising insurgency. An estimated 4,000 U.S. soldiers are in Iraq, working with Iraqi forces and helping with security. A U.S. military spokesman said no U.S. military casualties had been reported. The U.S. military said Iraqi forces backed by U.S. air and artillery strikes had captured a small town near Tikrit after government forces had lost control of it to an al-Qaida-inspired insurgent group. Efforts to isolate extremists from Sunni Arab towns in which they have operated with impunity for years now rely largely on U.S. air support and the presence of the 3,000-strong U.S. mission in Baghdad. U.S. forces help train the Iraqi army. The latest terror strike came five days after a series of suicide bombings rocked Baghdad and Samarra, the capital. Attackers have targeted civilian shopping centers in well-to-do neighborhoods. More than 20 people were killed and over 100 wounded. Samarra, Iraq's second-largest city, is about 250 km (160 miles) north of Baghdad. . . . . The blast comes about five days after a series of suicide bombings rocked Baghdad and Samarra, the capital.
