Got to the final part of my project. I've done some research and can't find anything on this specific issue that I'm having. I have a view controller with a @IBOutlet reference on a button that I want to push to a second view controller. I can get the button to push the first view controller just fine using this code @IBAction func notificationBtnTapped(_ sender: UIButton) { guard let notificationSender = sender as? UIButton else { return } if #available(iOS 9.0, *) { self.present(notificationSender.view, animated: true, completion: nil) } else { let notificationController = UIStoryboard(name: "Main", bundle: nil).instantiateViewController(withIdentifier: "NotificationViewController") as! NotificationViewController notificationController.nopresent = true present(notificationController, animated: true, completion: nil) } } and I can go back to the first view controller just fine with this code override func prepare(for segue: UIStoryboardSegue, sender: Any?) { if segue.identifier == "NotificationViewControllerToMain c6a93da74d
