Everyone knows that 1 GB of RAM is enough for Mac users and Windows, but how much RAM is enough for Android? If you are running an old phone with 512 MB or a new phone with 1 GB, how many apps can you install on your device? Would you like to install all new apps on your device because you have enough storage space? I am not joking, Android is an amazing operating system for your device. It allows you to add applications and install them to your device according to your desire. Now, today I will show you the ways to install the actual number of applications on your device. As long as you have the USB cable connecting your phone to the computer, you can install all Android applications. How to Install a Few Android Apps on a Computer? Let's start! The total number of applications on your device is determined by the amount of memory the operating system uses. There are two ways to increase the limit. The first way is to increase the physical capacity of the device, which is to increase the internal memory or external storage. However, this is not the recommended method because it depends on the performance of the device. The second way to increase the total number of apps is by allocating memory to the apps you use often.
