Easy Email Forwarding is a lightweight application designed with a single goal in mind: to help users forward email messages without altering the address details. It sports a clean and straightforward layout that allows you to add multiple accounts to the list. Plus, it offers support for POP3 server. Easy Email Forwarding gives users the possibility to add a new account by specifying the name, type, password, and receiver's address. What's more, you can configure port parameters, set up the SMTP options, mark the emails as read, include bulk emails and other folders, create backups, as well as delete email messages. Other important options worth mentioning are represented by the possibility to make the program run at Windows startup, ignore email messages with a specified file size, filter spam messages, as well as limit the subject of the forwarded messages to a maximum number of characters. Since there aren't many configuration settings, even less experienced users can set up the entire process with minimum effort. During our testing we have noticed that Easy Email Forwarding carries out a task quickly, and no errors showed up throughout the entire process. As it would be expected from such a small utility, it manages to remain light on the system resources, so it doesn't burden the overall performance of the computer, nor interfere with other programs' functionality. All things considered, Easy Email Forwarding offers an intuitive layout and useful features for helping you forward email messages efficiently. It is suitable for beginners and professionals alike.

Description" What are you waiting for? Download free today! Easy Email Forwarding-Get it right now! By the way please don't be offended if I vote no. The moderation for a question that isn't getting too many views is a bit annoying. It's not like I can't vote when the question isn't getting any views. I'm only letting you know in case you're still stuck and thinking "well it doesn't get views so it probably isn't interesting" I don't know what I could do for you to get to the moderation of an already upvoted answer but I understand your frustration. I have personally had a couple of questions recently that have been deleted by the community and then reopened. The moderator doesn't contact me about this. In the moderator's eyes, your question is already answered in the accepted answer. If the mod believes that the answer is correct then I understand that there's not much you can do about it. The mod would probably not have commented asking you to remove the question. You're welcome to make a feature request that a mod could contact you when a moderator votes to delete a question and leave a message in a comment, but I suspect it's not a priority to do so. In my opinion, the mod should leave a comment when they close a question. There's really no other reason for closing it and then deleting it without any kind of notification. The moderator should delete the questions that they think is "not useful". This is not their call to make. They are merely the executor of the user agreement. They shouldn't just be kicking questions around or "killing threads". The user agreement doesn't say anything about that and if it did, it would be poorly worded. I think that the community should decide which questions they think are useful and not. The community has the right to close questions that they feel are off topic, as well as flag questions that they feel don't belong. There
