In February 2005, investigators with the Criminal Investigation Division of the FBI announced they had successfully arrested a third fugitive from Mexico, now identified as Jose Martin Escobar, along with his wife, son, and several of their relatives, on allegations they have been engaged in the money-laundering process in northern California. Federal law enforcement officials have said Escobar is "in hiding and wants to remain that way." Another investigation As of 2007, federal law enforcement officials had another ongoing investigation into the drug cartel, the Zeta drug cartel. Federal officials have stated that this investigation may be a joint effort between the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) and the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA). The Zetas became infamous when they were blamed for a series of attacks on local law enforcement officers, which eventually led to the government shutting down a prison in Nuevo Laredo, Tamaulipas, where Zeta members were believed to have been taken. By December 2007, the Zeta cartel was assumed to have been disbanded.
