monotheism, the lie of the fear of death, and the oppression of women (not to mention the legitimization of slavery, antisemitism, and the obliteration of the indigenous world) are major parts of American capitalism. These are all topics that have been covered at great length in other discussions, so it is not necessary to go into them in depth here. Nevertheless, I will mention one or two things that are often overlooked and cannot be considered separately from the rest of the capitalist system. These are the legal/cultural aspects of imperialism. Imperialism is seen as a violent occupation and a colonizing system where the weaker nations are forced to submit to the will of the stronger. This is a misleading image. It is an image that is perpetuated by Marxists, although they do not think of it as a perpetuated image. It is perpetuated by the American media, which is owned by the "prestige" industrialists. "Prestige" is the name that the French use for a lot of the same kinds of products that Americans call "luxury." It is an image that is perpetuated by the American popular music industry and by the general image that people have of Americans. The image of the "western cowboy" is similar to this one. Americans (the same ones that have their hair dyed jet-black) can be photographed in such a way as to have the image of the "frontiersman" on the covers of their magazines. The frontiersman is seen as a "wild and untamed" American. The image is that of the "fierce primitive," as Joseph Conrad put it. This is also the image that the culture industry uses to sell people things. It sells them cars and houses in the image of the frontiersman and with the same imagery. This image is repeated for television shows, movies, comic books, etc. The image, particularly, of the "American frontier" is held up as one of the images of the American myth. The myth of the "frontier" is a myth that is based on a lot of lies. Let's look at some of the lies. The first lie is that the American frontier was a land of "free men" or a land of "free people." The reason that the American frontier was called the "frontier" is that it was only in the frontier that the boundaries of slavery were the longest. Because of the Civil War and the subsequent Reconstruction, black people were only allowed to live in the south for a limited amount of time. The North and the West could not be called a "frontier" because of the existence of slaves and because the institution of slavery was still very much alive. As far as I know, there are no "free black people" f988f36e3a
